

Quintessential Quiz Night

That community centre and pub classic testing competitiveness, knowledge, and team naming skills to the max!

For more fundraising ideas from table tennis throwdowns to batty bake sales visit www.batfoundation.com

The Quiz Night:

Run a quiz night for friends and family to help win over Alzheimer's. Brush up on your general knowledge and get to quizzing...

Getting started:

Pick a date and invite everyone for an evening of fact fuelled fun and frolics.

Book a location...community centres and pubs work really well and are often free or cheap based on refreshment sales.

Before the day:

You'll need your quiz questions. 6 rounds of 10 questions each, with a picture round halfway, makes a nice 2.5 - 3 hour quiz.

There are plenty of websites you can look at for question inspiration. Just remember to make a full list for your quiz master and answer sheets for all the teams.

On the day:

Once seated, welcome everyone and take team names so you can keep a score tally.

After each round, have teams swap answer sheets, mark each other, and note all scores on the tally sheet. At end of quiz announce the winners in reverse order.

In case of a tie have an extra question ready or even a funny task to find your winners.

Here are some bonuses to add to your quiz night...

Guessing Game...

Be it weight, name, number, or distance, get people to make their best anonymous guess as to the correct or nearest answer. Add on an extra donation for those wanting a guess.

Conundrum Comp...

There's no 30 second countdown clock here. Use a song, book, or film title. Jumble up the letters and get people to guess the answer. Winner is drawn from hat of right answers. Add an extra donation for those having a go.

Right old Raffle...

Ask quizeteers to donate prizes to a raffle. Just before end of quiz, pull out winning numbers and get people to pick out a prize. You'll need a raffle book for this. Sell strips as a simple way to increase donations.